About Lockgroove:

SharkAttack!'s 3rd release! We are proud to introduce to you our newest recording: Lockgroove's "Something to Give" b/w "Only One Time." For those of you unfamiliar with the Lockgroove sound please note: this record sounds best when played at the maximum volume. Yes, it's a cliché. Trust me - Just give it a shot and tell me I'm wrong. You see, "Something to Give" was recorded on a cassette 8-track machine. That's right, in a basement to boot!

When you listen at the appropriate volume, you can hear certain subtleties that otherwise go unheard and thus unappreciated. My personal favorite example of this is: at lower levels you might not pay any extra attention to the kick drum - turn it up a few notches and the trick is revealed! It's not a kick drum at all. It's a somewhat portly gentleman being hit in the gut with a sledgehammer. Yeah. Are we done here? Oh wait... side a is side b, and side b is side a.....got it? There was a bit of a slip-up in manufacturing. A simple misunderstanding. Everything is fine now. Thank you.

Quotes:

"Lockgroove's dense, full-on sound invites comparison to Brian Eno's "Music for Airports" -- as performed by a fighter jet squadron." - The Boston Globe

"The band creates dense cosmic symphonies with layers of head feeding noise" - Spin
